Health data doesn't only mean "obvious" information about people's medical conditions. Health data can include information that, when combined with other information, tells you something about a person's health.

Relevant special categories of data include data related to racial or ethnic origin, political opinions, religious or philosophical beliefs, genetic biometric and health data or data concerning a natural person's sex life or sexual orientation. When the use of an app results in the processing of such sensitive data, for instance in health or dating apps, typically, the controller has to ensure that there is explicit consent of the user for the processing of these data for particular specified purposes. It is possible that certain information processed in the mobile context, such as images, messages, user inputs, contain data that have to be qualified as sensitive data. Images are not generally considered sensitive data but images of persons can reveal their racial or ethnic origin, people's private messages can reveal people's beliefs and attitudes and health status. The same can be true for metadata, which collected over time can provide a uniquely invasive profile of users. While location data are not included in the list of special data categories, the processing of location data is generally considered to require special attention to the question of necessity and proportionality and major mobile OSs have implemented special mechanisms for location data transparency and user consent.

By default, we do not track your location. Also, the App does not collect, transmit, and/or use user location data. While indicating this provision as a factual basis for the operation of the Application, we will separately note that we may use and store information about your location if you give us permission to do so ("Location Data").
